ROOSEVELT AT EAGLE ISLAND

PEARY'S MEN ARGUE AGAINST DR. COOK'S CLAIMS.

McMillan, Borup and Henson Discuss Sledges, Snowshoes, the Eskimos' Talk and Whitney's Stlence-Ship Salls Again for New York-Peary Coming.

PORTLAND, Sept. 26 .- The stea mship Roosevelt reached Eagle Island at noon to-day in the midst of a northeast storm and dropped anchor off Commander Peary's island. That she would stop at Eagle Island on her way to New York was not known to any one but Commander Peary and her master. Peary said that she had come to Eagle Island for instructions before proceeding to New York and to land his personal effects. The ship sailed at dark for Sandy Hook, which Capt. Bob Bartlett said he expected to reach on Tuesday night, although she may not arrive there until Wednesday morning. The moment she reaches New York she will be under the control of the Peary Arctic Club, and when she takes part in the Fulton parade, as it was stated she would, Commander Peary will be on her bridge.

He said to-day that he did not intend to go to New York until the Cook controversy was cleared up and that he will leave Portland for Bar Harbor to-morrow noon to hold a conference with Gen. Thomas H. Hubbard, the president of the Peary Arctic Club, who has had Peary's statement in his possession since Thursday and who will advise with him on Monday about making it public. The men on the Roosevelt feel certain that when this statement of Pearv's is given to the world there will be but one opinion relative to the claim of Dr. Cook relative to the claim of Dr. Frederick A. Cook! and that its publication will so clear the atmosphere that when Peary stands upon the Roosevelt's bridge in the Fulton parade he will be acclaimed as the only man who has ever stood upon the top of the earth. Commander Peary had not given out any information about the Roosevelt touching at Eagle Island. Whether he desired that the members of his expedition should not have another chance to talk before the publication of the evidence he assumes to have against Dr. Cook is not known, but none of the men on the posevelt knew that she would put into Eagle Island until after she left Sydney last Wednesday. To-day Commander Peary asked that the daily interview with him be cancelled to give him a little rest and the newspaper men understood that he was not to be disturbed. As soon as the Roosevelt dropped an chor her crew and that of a fishing vessel which had been picked up outside to pilot her into the roadstead went to work landing boxes, barrels and bales con-Commander Peary's effects and those of Prof. McMillan, whose home is in Freeport, not far from Eagle Island. Among the things sent ashore were some furs, souvenirs of the Greely and other expeditions which had been brought home on the Roosevelt, the books and papers of Commander Peary and Prof. McMillan and all of their personal baggage. Late in the afternoon Capt. Bart-lett, Prof. McMillan, Borup and Dr. Goodsell went ashore to dine with Commander Peary and his family and after dimner the Roosevelt got under way and stood

While at anchor the Roosevelt's crew were very reticent. Pritchard, the cabin boy, remained in the galley. He was morose and refused to answer questions. While the newspaper men were about there was always some one in the galley with Pritchard. Henson, the negro who accompanied Peary to the pole, took to his stateroom when the newspaper men stepped on board and was only brought out when Capt. Bartlett went in to find him. Prof. McMillan was disposed to talk and did talk with some readiness, but the others volunteered little.

Henson said that he had seen the Eskimos who had been sent back by Dr. Cook when he started on the last stage of his journey for the pole. He said he had known them all for many years, some of them when they were being carried about in their mother's hoods. He are proud of what we did." intimated that there were not twelve of them in the party sent back but a less many. He had conversed with all of them but he would not state what they had told him beyond what he has already said, that Dr. Cook had not been on the ice away from the land longer than two sleeps or two days journey. He said he had not been told by any of these Eskimos that Cook had been to the top of the earth.

Henson talked freely about the handling of Eskimo dogs and said that Dr. Cock knew nothing about dogs and could not harness one or handle them after they were harnessed.

"I can handle Eskimo dogs as well as any Eckimo," said Henson, "but it has taken me years to learn how to do it. Dr. Cook knows absolutely nothing about them."

Speaking of sledges Henson said that the Peary sledge, similar to the sledge Morris K. Jesup, which was taken by Peary to the pole, was the only sledge he had ever seen which could be used effectively on the Arctic ice. No one knew about the sledge but the Commander and himself and no one could make one like it. Dr. Cook, he said, knew nothing about building sledges.

The Eskimo can make the sledges they use, but not the kind that are used in Arctic exploration. It had taken him years to learn how to make sledges and he didn't believe Dr. Cook knew how to build a sledge. It requires more than a knowledge of carpentry, Henson said, to make a sledge. They have to be lashed together because nails or bolts will split the wood.

The negro said he had been told by the Commander not to talk about Cook and he would not. He laughed when told Cook was to lecture in New York on Monday on his trip to the pole and and said he would like to hear it. Prof. McMillan has recovered the most valuable of the books stolen from him at Sydney by the souvenir hunters, those containing his notes on ornithology and zoology-on the Arctic fauna. The Eskimo census, which was reported as having been stolen, was not taken from the ship. Borup also found some of the articles he had jost by souvenir hunters excepting two scientific books filled with notes.

"Twenty volumes were sent me and cached at Cape York," he said. "The Eskimos didn't touch this property, but the first white people we saw stole everything they could get their hands on.' He felt very badly over the loss of his

Prof. McMillan, in speaking about his journey to Fort Conger, where he found said that the first white man who ever stepped into Fort Conger after Greely left it was Commander Peary in 1899, when he lost his toes by having his feet frozen.

When he was with Peary in '91 and '92 he made a trip to the icecap, of Greenland, but that wasn't I mean by ice upon the frozen He has never travelled upon it at any time until his last expedition, if he did then. The records show all of this."

Speaking about snowshoes, McMillan said that the members of expeditions upon the ice always carry extra snowshoes and usually break one or two pairs on a long trip.

"Snowshoes always show the effect of a long tramp on the ice," said McMillan. 'Cook's snowshoes didn't show the sign of much wear when he turned up at Etah, I understand. In my opinion he had never taken a very long journey on them." McMillan said he was going with the Roosevelt to New York and would then return to Freeport, Me. He was told they were going to have a celebration in his honor in that town when he got back and he said, if that was the case, he didn' know that he should hurry back. Borup said that Whitney, the young

New Haven sportsman, was on the Roose velt from June 17, 1908, until the ship got to Sydney. He was on her again this "He met us at Cape Sheridan and thought she was his relief ship," said "He was then expecting he would have to pass another winter in the north. His civilized clothing was all gone and he wore a birdskin shirt and Eskimo clothes. He had plenty of ammunition and nothing else. Whitney is the best shot I ever saw. I saw him shoot an Arctic hare on the run at 400 yards. He lived with us for a week and talked freely about everything and never mentioned Dr. Cook's having been to the pole, although he spoke about him. He did not impress me as the kind of a man who would conceal anything of that kind. He talked freely about everything."

Borup said he had seen no instruments with Whitney for taking observations, and if Cook's instruments were with him he said nothing about it to any one.

Murphy, the boatswain, said that he had seen all the Eskimos Cook said he had with him. He can talk Eskimo and these men had all talked with him freely. He knew Etuck-Hue, one of the two Eskimos whom Cook says he took with him to the pole, intimately. He did not tell him Cook had been to the pole. Murphy then said he had been told not to talk about Cook and didn't propose to do so. Capt. Bartlett gave The SUN correspondent a signed statement which he asked to have printed. It said:

"I wish to deny emphatically that I ever shed tears because Commander Peary would not take me to the pole with him. I knew he was going to take Henson, but did not ask to go, I was proud and glad to support him in every way I could. The statement which has been published that I shed tears because I couldn't go
